Ready to jump into contract work?

How to navigate contract relationships and opportunities

What is contract work?

Contract work is when someone is employed by a vendor/staffing agency and is placed on an assignment at another company (end client) for a specified duration. The vendor/staffing agency is the contractor's employer and will be able to answer all questions related to their assignment, duration, and provide feedback on their work.

How to prepare with considering applying for contract jobs?

- Review job descriptions and update your resume to highlight how your experience can contribute to the position's goals. Recruiters will be able to help you with this piece, so make sure to leverage their expertise.

- When interviewing, ask questions and come prepared. Eliminate distractions if interviewing virtually and take pride in how you show up. Inquire about company culture and team structures.

- Contract jobs could strengthen your resume by gaining experience at many organizations or even introduce you to a company you want to find a full-time opportunity with long-term.

- This could be your chance to enter a new field, strengthen a skill you want to work on, learn how different organizations work - let your passion and curiosity show!
